Chicago Sun-Times enhancing the communities it serves.

The Chicago Sun-Times believes that investing in the youth of Chicago and its neighborhoods is an investment in the newspaper. Through its charitable foundation, the Chicago Sun-Times Charity Trust, it provides support to organizations that help our youth develop to their highest potential targeting programs that address their needs and empowers them with the skills necessary to evolve into literate responsible adults.

- Education programs aimed at the prevention of school failure.
- Literacy programs that promote the importance and value of the written word.
- Arts and culture programs that touch the children of all backgrounds.
- Arts and culture activities that increase knowledge and appreciation and promote creativity and self-esteem.
- Community-wide support and partnership programs that advocate change to remedy and monitor social conditions affecting our youth.

Helping those who need it most...

The Charity Trust provides school supplies to thousands of homeless children through the Tools for Schools program. Providing them with the tools they need to learn.

The Trust's Letters to Santa program connects thousands of needy and impoverished children with generous, caring individuals who grant them their holiday wishes. Without this program, these children would not have a happy holiday.
